Personal Statement

From the age of 10 I have always expressed an interest in computing and related subjects. It has allowed me to demonstrate my ability to analyse and quickly understand systems varying in complexity. Because of this interest in computing, and specifically web based technologies, I have always felt self driven to develop my skills further and learn from my experiences. I like being thanked for producing high quality solutions and this in itself motivates me.

I have been learning to make websites for nearly a decade now. It has grown from an idle hobby to a marketable skill; one that can make a valuable contribution to industry. I have also developed a good understanding of project management, constantly gaining experience working in a variety of teams.

When I'm not planning, developing or talking about websites, I enjoy watching anything by Simon Pegg, attempting to mix on my record decks or simply relaxing and socialising with friends.

I have also be known to juggle, ride my bike, go paint balling, cook and build large sound systems.
